I. Program Administration

Standard*Program Philosophy

1.1 The early childhood program's philosophy statement and policies are consistent with early childhood practices that are age and developmentally appropriate and reflect the role of families. The written philosophy statement for the early childhood program is used by the staff as the foundation for planning, for staff development, and for implementation, evaluation, and continuous improvement of the program.

Indicator*1.1.2 Program Evaluation

The program establishes and implements a process for ongoing program evaluation. Annually, the program conducts a self-evaluation of the program policies, procedures, and practices. The results of the program evaluation are shared with staff, families, and other stakeholders.

Required Evidence

- ☐ Process for program evaluation and timeline
- ☐ Copies of completed annual program evaluation
- ☐ Program goals for on-going improvement

Best Practices Rationale

Annual program evaluation is a process to help check the effectiveness of the program; identify systemic issues, and consider improvements/adjustments. It is also an important way to examine quality, and work to continually improve your program. Program evaluation is a key part of program planning and continuous improvement.

The evaluation process is conducted by program administration, staff, families, and other community partners. Quality requires identification of program goals; assessment of policies and procedures; and the implementation of best practices.

The results of the program evaluation are used throughout the year to ensure program accountability.

Program Notes

The evaluation process is on-going until the end of the school year.

Standard*Program Personnel*1.2.3 Qualification: Child Care Teacher Licensed Child Care/Head Start*Indicator:

Licensed Child Care / Head Start – Early Childhood Educator, responsible for the care and education of a group of children from birth through age five, must have at least an Associate's degree in Early Childhood Education/Child Development or related field and must hold a Maryland Child Care Credential of level five.

Public School – Classroom Educator must have at least a Bachelor's degree in Early Childhood Education/Child Development or related field and meet Maryland State Certification requirements for early childhood education.

Best Practices / Rationale:

Early Childhood Educators who are appropriately educated are better prepared to plan and implement quality, developmentally appropriate programs for young children. Knowledge of child development and best practice is gained through education, experience working with young children, and ongoing professional development.

Programs understand the importance of employing qualified educators and providing ongoing professional development to enhance their knowledge and skills. When the early childhood educator is absent, a qualified substitute is provided to ensure continued program quality.

Educators are provided job descriptions that reflect expectations in: building relationships with children and families; implementing curriculum; instructional and assessment strategies; and professionalism.

| Indicator1.2.5 Professional SupportThe program implements policies that provide support to staff in order to meet professional and personal needs.                         | Best Practices RationaleThe cornerstone of a program's success is the staff. Teaching staff are responsible for guiding children's learning experiences in the classroom. The support provided to the teaching staff is essential to children's learning and program quality.Professional support strategies are effective at: increasing staff retention; promoting personal and professional well-being; and improving performance. Adult restroom and lounge separate from children's activity area; adequate individual storage area for personal belongings; designated meeting or conference area; and time for staff members to meet their personal needs and handle administrative/planning tasks are all strategies for professional support.Planning time is an essential professional support. Educators need a designated time to think about and plan activities that are engaging, challenging, and developmentally appropriate. |

| Indicator1.3.1 Transition and Continuity of Services within the programProgram staff develops transition plans for children moving to a new group/classroom within the program that communicate children's individual strengths and needs. | Best Practices RationaleConsistency and continuity play an important role in helping children successfully manage transitions. Young children develop relationships with educators and learn to trust or distrust the world around them through predictable routines and experiences.Children grouped by age will likely change educators and classrooms several times over the course of their enrollment. It is important to recognize that a child who is moving from one classroom to another will experience multiple losses: a place he or she has come to know and trust; an educator he or she depends on and adores; children he or she has befriended; and routines that help him or her feel secure and competent. These transitions are handled with great care.The goal is a smooth transition that minimizes any emotional concerns for the child and family, and maximizes all that is known about the child's prior progress so that there are no interruptions in learning. | Indicator1.3.2 Transition and Continuity of Services between Licensed Child Care/Head Start and Local Public SchoolLicensed Child Care/Head Start and Local Public School staff collaboratively develop transition plans for children moving to a new program that communicate children's individual strengths and needs. | Best Practices RationaleConsistency and continuity play an important role in helping children successfully manage transitions. Transition planning addresses issues for all children, including children with special needs, such as: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Ways for the family to facilitate the child's health and learning needs</li> <li>• Written or verbal communication between program staff that provide children's strengths, needs, and interests</li> <li>• Preparing the child and family for the transition</li> </ul>The goal is a smooth transition that minimizes any emotional concerns for the child and family, and maximizes all that is known about the child's prior progress so that there are no interruptions in learning. As educators plan for children's learning, it is critically important that they set high, achievable expectations for all children, including those with unique challenges due to physical, cognitive, emotional, or linguistic differences. By targeting the particular strengths and interests of each child, educators are able to plan for instruction that supports the achievement of their goals.Curriculum that is aligned to the Maryland Early Learning Standards reflects intentional and systematic instruction that will advance growth and learning. Lesson plans reflect the curriculum and allow for strategies to provide opportunities for children to be actively engaged in discovery and learning. These should include a mix of child-directed and educator-directed explorations that value teachable moments. (pg. 115-120, The Guide) |

| Indicator1.3.5 Multiple Assessment MethodsMultiple assessment methods are used to identify children’s strengths, needs, interests, and progress. Information about areas of development and progress are systematically collected and documented throughout the program year.                                                                                                                                                                                                 | Best Practices RationaleOngoing assessment helps educators understand if the curriculum and related lesson plans are effective. The data from assessment helps educators know when it is appropriate to jump ahead, or when they need to circle back to cover material again. Instructional goals are fine-tuned, and decisions about grouping and re-grouping children are based on a variety of assessment data.Educators regularly observe the developmental needs and interests of children. Documentation techniques such as anecdotal records, checklists, and collection of work samples are used to gain information about each child’s interests, strengths, and needs. Parent’s knowledge of their child’s learning and development is solicited and incorporated into ongoing assessment strategies.Attention is given to assessing progress of English Language Learners and other children with linguistic differences. There is evidence of classroom assessment accommodations for children with disabilities. (Chapter 8, The Guide) |

Assessment of children is used as part of the curriculum planning and implementation cycle.Understanding the whole child helps educators apply the results of assessment in context, allowing educators to focus on the strengths of the child and how those can be used to bolster all areas of learning and development.The purpose of assessment is to gain a better understanding of a child’s areas of strengths and needs, and to adjust instruction to promote learning. It is essential that assessments are intentionally linked to child growth, development, curriculum, and instruction. Educators continuously review progress and use that information to modify their teaching to match the children’s pace of learning, abilities, and interests. (Chapter 8, The Guide) |

| Indicator2.1.2(c) Indoor Environment: Intentional Learning OpportunitiesThe learning environment reflects the goals of the early childhood program, creating an environment where learning is integrated across domains and the layout of the room is organized to support intentional, integrated learning.                                | Best Practices RationaleThe environment provides children with choices, offering some control over what they are choosing and instilling a sense of independence, ownership, and pride in the process.Items displayed on the walls, bulletin boards, and windows reflect learning goals of the program. Educators are mindful of clutter and over-stimulation. Intentionally placed displays also allow space for the eyes to rest, promoting a calm aesthetic environment. Items displayed provide an opportunity to highlight the children's imagination, creativity, and experiences. Displays are at children's eye level and reflect a multicultural environment. A skillful educator builds the environment with the children so that they develop a sense of ownership for the environment and see a representation of their work.Easily moveable furniture and shelves enable educators to place materials close to their related learning spaces. Labels on materials help children easily find materials for use and for clean-up. (pp. 134-135, The Guide) |

It is reflective of what is in our neighborhood and community, honest and true, not just dressed up in traditional clothing, respectful and kind, comprehensive and cross-curricular. The materials, books, pictures, posters, artifacts/realia, music, art, and puppets are authentic in reflecting diversity. The ultimate goal is to ensure that children are able to "see" themselves using these objects and to use them to learn about others.Early childhood educators are sensitive to read the cues of the family, respect their values and priorities for their children and not insert their own expectations or views. Further, understanding the role the community plays for the family is also key. (pp. 67-68, The Guide) |

They give the child control; provide adaptive scaffolds to help children progress in skill development at their individual rates; and are used as one of the many options to support children's learning.Screen time recommendations from public health organizations are considered when determining technology use for children birth – 5 years of age. Use of technology with children ages 2 – 6 is interactive. Any uses of technology and interactive media in programs for children younger than 2 years of age is limited to those that appropriately support responsive interactions between educators and children and strengthen adult-child relationships.When used appropriately, and keeping screen time recommendations in mind, technology and interactive media have the potential to enhance, without replacing, creative play, exploration, physical activity, outdoor experiences, conversation and social interactions.(p. 121, 136, The Guide and NAEYC/Fred Rogers Center position statement) |

Seven domains are identified as key areas of development for preschool –aged children. Understanding the developmental characteristics of young learners provides a frame of reference so that early childhood educators can anticipate and plan for a continuum of children's learning.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Required Evidence<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li><input type="radio"/> Learning experiences are interesting and appropriately challenging</li> <li><input type="radio"/> A variety of materials are used for children to engage in learning that fits within the curriculum</li> <li><input type="radio"/> Opportunities for practicing skills are integrated across the curriculum</li> <li><input type="radio"/> The needs of the individual child are balanced with the needs of the group</li> <li><input type="radio"/> Evidence of learning experiences occurring in all domains</li> </ul> | Taking all of the domains of development into consideration and adding temperament, personality, interests, family culture, and wellness into the unique profiles of a child's knowledge, skills, and attitudes toward life and learning is taking a whole child view. This is important when considering the development of a child because looking at a specific domain informs what to teach and how to build-up individual skills in a child. Looking at the whole child informs how to teach including approaches differentiation individualization, and pace. Providing ways for children to demonstrate understanding gives each child the opportunity to express their abilities and interest as individuals. (pp. 21, 26, 29, The Guide) |

Social foundations include the skills necessary to regulate one's own behavior and emotions, develop healthy relationships with adults and other children, and create a sense of positive identity. It focuses on children's approaches to learning including: their willingness to initiate, engage, and sustain participation in different learning activities; their ability to demonstrate control through executive function skills; and self-regulation to remain on task in the face of distractions and comply with rules, routines and expectations.Skilled early childhood educators intentionally plan for and help young children learn how to develop healthy relationships with adults and other children.Educators and children generate classroom rules together and decide on appropriate consequences throughout the year. Social conflicts between children are used as a learning experience with educators providing guidance and support to help children resolve conflicts. (pp. 22, 81, The Guide) |

Inhibitory control, the ability to control one's impulses, is also an executive function skill.Working memory and mental flexibility strengthen as children gain, through practice, the ability to wait for their turn, return to interrupted work, or wait for the educator's attention (and remember why they wanted to talk to their educator). Early childhood educators continuously support children in building executive function because it influences learning at all stages.Throughout the day, skilled educators look for ways to introduce and extend exposure to the types of executive function skills that will serve children long into the future. This includes those skills that facilitate and support the process of learning, such as a child's willingness to initiate, engage, sustain participation in different learning activities, and the ability to demonstrate control, so that they can remain on task in the face of distractions. Children are encouraged to express ideas using shapes, symbols, drawings, or dictating words and phrases. Children may use inventive spelling, while adults model "adult writing" when a child is dictating a story. (p. 92, The Guide) |

They are aware of how to build on children's experiences and intentionally incorporate math into everyday learning across the curriculum. The five strands of math are counting and cardinality, operations and algebraic thinking, measurement and data, geometry, and number and operations in base ten.Educators use children's natural interest in math to enhance their experiences in preschool and school, using the following practices: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Establish number and operations as a foundational content area</li> <li>• Incorporate math in other content areas</li> <li>• Use progress monitoring to guide instruction</li> <li>• Focus on teaching children to view the world mathematically</li> <li>• Intentional daily math instruction</li> </ul> |

As children explore with sand and water, cook, garden, or care for a pet they are recognizing patterns, making predictions, and formulating answers to questions. The educator's role is to bring the scientific vocabulary to these activities and ask children questions that expand their thinking. |

Educators help children value diversity and recognize the important role that each person plays in building a strong and vibrant society. The social studies program enables children to participate effectively in the groups to which they belong. Democratic and participatory school and classroom environments are essential to this type of real world learning. (pp. 99-100, The Guide)The social studies program focuses on opportunities for children to learn about themselves, their community and the world. Learning takes place in the context of openness and appreciation for diversity of culture, and respect for similarities and differences among people. Activities that foster citizenship skills and an understanding of the unique qualities and characteristics of others promote cooperative learning and achievement of common goals. |

| Indicator2.4.2 Independent Learning ExplorationIndependent learning provides opportunities for children to explore, experiment, question, investigate, and problem-solve. Children take responsibility for their learning.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | Best Practices RationaleMaterials that encourage open-ended thinking and active participation are an integral part of daily application and follow-up learning. Educators facilitate learning based on the understanding of each child's developmental strengths and needs and use independent learning opportunities to observe and record children's performance. This is a dynamic process between the educator and child with the educator being the facilitator and the child becoming the investigator.Independent learning is an integral part of each day. Educators provide time for children to immerse themselves in learning without the pressure of a quick rotation from one center/task to the next. A tremendous amount of development happens as children work within learning centers.Learning center goals are linked to the goals of the curriculum. Educators are mindful of connecting the opportunities in learning centers to the domains of development, providing multiple modalities, and offering multiple levels of tasks so that all learners can work together but on different activities within a learning center. To help children to acquire new skills and concepts, educators select from a range of strategies, including: asking open-ended questions; offering cues and prompts; listening attentively to children's responses and giving them enough time to express themselves; demonstrating skills; adding more complex materials or concepts to a learning situation; and providing opportunities for cooperative learning.Because there is no such thing as a "typical learner" and any kind of one-size-fits-all educational approach does not reach all learners, children of all abilities need a variety of opportunities to access curriculum and assessments. Educators provide multiple and flexible ways for children to demonstrate what they have learned. Educators also have multiple and flexible means of engaging the learner so that all children are motivated to learn. (p. 63, The Guide) |

Transition times are opportunities for developing social foundation skills. In this, educators help children learn how to manage choices and change, how to plan their time, how to follow directions, how to work collaboratively, and how to learn responsibility. The main idea is that transitions are a time for learning, too.                                                                                              |

The children are aware of expectations and daily routines. Children and educators share responsibility for the classroom. Minimal amounts of time are spent getting ready, sitting, and listening. Sufficient time is allocated for transitions to allow children to clean up and prepare for the next activity. Educators use a variety of strategies to signal a transition, e.g. rhythmic clapping, finger play, song, dimming the lights, ringing a bell, music, or verbal announcement. (p. 123, The Guide) |

They advocate for their children and are active in guiding their education.Families are respected as the experts on their children. Educators engage families about their hopes and dreams for their children. Families are asked about any ideas or concerns they may have regarding collaboration and involvement. Educators take the time to listen to family ideas and concerns, as well as invite them to continuously share input. Educators and families work together to set goals and identify ways in which they can work together to achieve those goals.Educators share information about evidence-based family programs to support specific family engagement goals. These goals may focus on literacy, comprehensive family support, home visiting, or school readiness goals. Strategies that encourage engagement also include sending materials home with tips for families to support learning at home. (pp. 41-46, The Guide) |

Early childhood educators need families to be active participants in supporting children’s learning in and out of the home.From the beginning, early childhood educators talk with families about the importance of regular, ongoing assessment and how different assessments are used to monitor children’s progress. Assessments help educators and families better understand the strengths and potential challenges of individual children, so that strategies can be tailored to best meet each child’s interests and needs.A parent-teacher conference is the typical approach used to share information about children’s learning and the growth they have made. Most critical in those conversations is the professional guidance by educators on what families can do at home to support their child’s learning. Providing suggestions for action is also important so that the family knows precisely what they can do to help their child make gains in a given area of development. (pp. 188-189, The Guide) |

While early childhood educators come up with a host of strategies, they keep in mind that engagement is a reciprocal partnership and involve families in the development of ideas and strategies as well. Effective family engagement strategies create a culture of high expectations in programs where family members support learning at home and monitor their children's performance. They advocate for their children and are active in guiding their education.Some strategies that encourage engagement include: sending materials home in language that is family friendly; inviting families into the program to help with learning projects; giving families specific tasks so they can be part of the learning/teaching experience; and working with groups of families to co-create events of special interests. | Indicator3.1.5 Community Engagement and InvolvementCommunity resources are used to strengthen early learning programs, families, and children’s learning.                                                                                      | Best Practices RationaleCommunity engagement is a partnership. The early childhood program and the larger community work together supporting one another and sharing responsibility for meeting the comprehensive needs of young children and their families.Programs look for ways to rally the support and resources needed to meet the needs of the whole child and go beyond what the program can provide. They can seek out ways to be a valued resource to the community as well, offering a place for meetings, extending training opportunities to providers through the community, participating in local celebrations, and joining forces with the community to speak out on behalf of children and their familiesThere are many strategies that programs can use to engage the community. Some of these strategies include, but are not limited to: inviting community and business leaders to your program; partnering with the local library; reaching out to local museums; partnering with local service organizations; and/or connecting with a local nursing home or hospital. | Indicator3.1.6 EvaluationFamily and community partners are encouraged to provide input to strengthen early learning programs, family practices, and children’s learning and development.                    | Best Practices RationaleEvaluation and feedback from families are important elements of successful programs. There are three steps programs can use to evaluate their effectiveness: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Measuring participation and attendance at events to help identify how to best recruit and retain participants</li> <li>• Gathering baseline family data at the beginning of the year, which allows staff to identify roadblocks or strengths for families</li> <li>• Surveying the needs and satisfaction of families to tailor the types of activities to support families</li> </ul>Knowing the research on the characteristics and evaluation practices of successful family engagement programs can be helpful as educators seek to develop or choose initiatives to engage their families. A systemic approach where family engagement values and principles are woven into every aspect of the program has a greater likelihood of being effective and successful. |
